2. Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions below:

Helen Keller writes with an effortless grace and authority that is unmatched by any other writer in her genre. Helen Keller's autobiography, The Story of My Life (1902), was written during her stay at Radcliffe College and published when she was 22 years old. It chronicles her life from infancy to age 21, beginning with her family's home at Alabama and the disease that rendered her deaf and blind. The majority of the book is devoted to Helen's schooling, which began when teacher Anne Sullivan came into her home to teach her various modes of communication. To begin, she spelt letters into Helen's hand, assisting her in learning the names of numerous objects in her environment. This gradually evolved to Helen trying to learn to speak and read braille, and her communication eventually improved to the point where she was able to attend college among those who could sight and hear. Three sections comprise this autobiography. The first section is a first-person description of Helen's life up to the age of 21. It chronicles all of her significant life experiences, from vacations across the country to the many schools she attended, but also incorporates many of her reflections and observations on the events that have occurred. The second section of the book is a vast selection of letters Helen produced throughout her life, demonstrating her substantial growth in her communication talents over time. The final section contains commentary by the book's editor, assisted by Miss Sullivan, on various aspects of Helen's life as documented in her autobiography.

Since the mid-20th century, The Story of My Life has earned widespread acclaim and has been turned into numerous plays and films. The Miracle Worker, a 1962 Hollywood feature film about Anne Sullivan and her accomplishment in coaching Helen Keller, is the most famous of these.
